

Master's Programme in Educational Research EURYTHMY

Description

This Master's programme in eurythmy is offered at Emerson College in England and awards students a Master's Degree in Education from Rudolf Steiner University College in Oslo, Norway (RSUC). It is delivered in partnership with Alanus University in Alfter, Germany where students are registered. It is open to all eurythmists working in schools, special needs homes, or with adults in social contexts such as teacher trainings, eurythmy trainings, workshops and courses for the public, who wish to deepen and expand their work through a practice-based research Master's.

The Master's programme aims to develop and cultivate the transformative aspects of education and the art of eurythmy in the broadest sense. On the one hand, the Master's programme facilitates educational research competence and, on the other, it aims to enhance eurythmical expertise. Reflection on eurythmy and teaching in a contemporary context enlivens professional activities and develops new ways of seeing and thinking about eurythmy, education and art. It is empowering and builds both competence and confidence. Student research projects will be shaped according to the questions, contexts, and individual initiative students bring with them from their own professional contexts.
